THE POLYNESIAN.

HONOLULU, SATURDAY, JAN. 9, 1847.

Register of Foreigners Residing in Honolulu.

If the old saying, that "every one likes to see his own name in print," be true, we shall be a popular editor for one week at least, for we have taken especial pains, and been at considerable expense, to procure the lists of the "Foreign Residents" of Honolulu, for the benefit of their own and future generations. In 1900, many a one of the then "upper crust," the aristocracy of Hawaii, the founders of a family and caste, will recognise in this list the modest names and occupations of their progenitors, and perhaps be as proud of their honest and humble origin in the birth-period of their country and fortunes as any of the old Roman Cornelii, Gracchii, or others of redoubtable fame were of the robber-exploits of their warlike ancestry.

But seriously, we have a laudable object in view in dipping thus egotistically into the statistics of our town and country. Small as they are, they may be something by and by, and the somebodies of that day, the lynx-eyed antiquary, the purse-proud cronies, the title-craving fool, the zealous historian, the land-craving litigant, the curious and prying of all sorts and of all motives, will be making over the records of the past to discover something withal to feed their vanity, self-esteem or love. They will have but to recur to the "Polynesian" of 1847 and learn the whole story; and if armorial bearing are the rage of that age, they no doubt will be able to descry some vestige of fancied honor from which to trace the cunning device. Those for whom our statistical spy has been unable to find any trade or profession, had better find one without delay, for fear their children of the fifth generation may undutifully class them as loafers, which Webster interprets "an idle man, who seeks his living by sponging or expedients." As for gentlemen par excellence, our country is altogether too new for them; they are the growth of a richer vegetation, the flowers of skillful culture and indefatigable care.

Another motive we derive from the fact, that strangers grumble not a little when they reach here, at not finding a civilization corresponding to their preconceived ideas, derived they can scarce tell how themselves. Names and figures tell their own story, and if their imagination blunders with so plain a chart before them, the sin be on their own heads. Honolulu has some good things of its own, particularly its climate, but it is a stale place to the frequenter of Parisian operas, restaurants and Boulevards, though possessing some attractions to the lovers of less refined novelties.

Last but not least, in favor of our labor of love, is that annual summaries like these serve as mile-stones to mark our progress in our march of alteration, and we humbly trust, improvement, on the great highroad of time. Religion, morals, commerce, population and physics have each their divisions, and our readers can apply their own judgments in figuring out the results.
